Ignorance is in the mind of the beholder. The statement is misleading and difficult to understand. It seems to suggest that ignorance is a subjective perception, but the context is unclear. A more appropriate reformulation might be: "Ignorance is a subjective perception that can vary from person to person."

S. P. THAKUR
Assistant Professor, IIT, Kharagpur

The statement "Ignorance is in the mind of the beholder." is a subjective assertion. It suggests that ignorance is a subjective perception that can vary from person to person. A more appropriate reformulation might be: "Ignorance is a subjective perception that can vary from person to person."